

AIM TO AFRICA
2018

My AIM assignment emphasizes using creative resources to build promotion for this amazing program & continent, but I knew deep down inside that God had something even more than that in store. Boy, was I right...and it's only been one month!

It's nearly impossible to express my heart in word form in reference to all the feelings, experiences, etc. that this trip has graciously given me.

I came with expectations of it being a just like Togo...little did I know my expectations were about to be blown out of the water. ***Note to self: TOGO IS NOT GHANA. GHANA IS NOT TOGO. And that's good!

After this great revelation, I realized I needed to embrace this new journey and all of it's awesome differences.

As it turns out, I couldn't be more in love with this place, the peace here, the sweet people, the DreamLight church community, and family-based culture.

I'm SO EXCITED to be here, and ultimately for what God is going to do & has already done!!!

COMMON GROUNDS

If you were to sum up my passions it would look something like this: people, culture, photography, & coffee. Something that I truly believe has helped me in establishing connections here, has been to find a common ground with the people I meet. I'm oh so thankful to have a little tribe of solid young adult friends here. At first it was just to have people to interact with at church - because mama didn't raise no introvert! I'm from the South so I have to be a people person, it's in my blood. But now these connections have developed into something even more amazing, because it's not just friends to hang with - it's friends to pray with, to grow w/ God in, to share our dreams about the kingdom with.

This may sound naive, but it's quite possibly one of the most humbling and motivating experiences to sit down with someone your age who's from a totally different culture, tribe, race, continent, you name it! And to hear how THIS GENERATION, all over the world, is on fire for God and how they want to impact the kingdom! WOW! It definitely puts the global kingdom into a whole different perspective, because God is preparing His world - not just this North American kingdom that I have been surrounded by my all of my life. Aside from that impeccable revelation that has birthed from these connections, I have a burden now for this age group here. They don't have a Hyphen group here, nor were they exposed to what that is. But, I was telling them about our Hyphen prayer meetings back home and they got soooo excited to hear something like that existed for their age specifically! So, now there's going to be two Monday nights that we meet, have a prayer service, then I speak to them about topics that are relevant to our age & whatever He leads me to speak. All in all, this experience of finding common grounds with the people I have been surrounded by, all differences aside, there's literally NO limits to what God can do when you make it a mission to be a friend to somebody!
