Opening my eyes

On August 23, 2018, I took myself down to Senate Square near Helsinki Cathedral at 10pm. There had been an advertisement for a local Spanish aerial performance. It sounded neat and I hadn't really been out in Helsinki at night to experience what night life felt like. The experience in my head was going to be light and nice. I got on my tram and headed down there right after music practice and took on the evening. This evening was not what I had expected it to be. There were more people out than I had ever seen in Helsinki. Since it was a big deal, people had been drinking and there were bands playing everywhere.

What I expected to be a light experience ended up opening up my eyes to how much this country needs God. You see, when it's dark, the dark came out to play. I realized just how desperate this place is for a move of God, and it made my heart hurt for these people. God will use experiences to shape our outlook if we let him, and that is what happened. As I walked back to my apartment, it was as if he was opening my eyes to how great the need, but also how great he is. Where there is darkness, there must be someone willing to be the light. I'm so thankful for those who are hearer willing to be the light to this very dark country.
