October, part 2

My second month here has been eventful and exciting. I was able to travel back to Prague, Czech Republic for the General Conference they had. Bro Johnson was the main speaker and each night was like a piece of the barrier that has kept the Czech people from hearing and understanding the gospel was breaking away. We had many visitors each night and even had an engagement announcement that Sunday!

It was so good to be back in Prague with friends who have become family and a part of my heart. I was able to reconnect with a few friends that I made last year and we were able to have mini Bible studies in whatever coffee shop we could find.

The week ended too soon but it was freeing to see the city again and experience the temperaments of the Czech people again.

I flew back to Stockholm and a train was waiting for me to take me back to Falun, Sweden. We hit the ground running and have had several new contacts this past month.

I preached my second message to the congregation in Falun a few weeks later. It still feels weird to say that out loud, let alone type it but God has a way of taking those who are willing and He exceeds their expectations of themselves. I am thankful for these experiences that God gives me.

Last week we had two new visitors in the church in Stockholm and one of them was baptized! Because of her cultural background she has asked us to not post any photos of her.

Also, this past week there was an elderly couple that wrote a letter to the assistant Pastor here. They had heard of us because their granddaughter goes to school with the assistant pastors daughter. They wrote a note to him and asked, “are you the people who believe in Jesus name baptism, women not cutting their hair, and women wear long dresses?” Simple things like not cutting your hair are still a powerful testimony. They attended church this past Sunday and the presence of God was falling on them greatly. I am excited to see how their relationship with God and the church will grow.

I am on my last month here in Sweden, part of me is ready to be home but the other part is waiting in expectation for God will continue to do in the country of Sweden.

Until next time,
